Reinforcement Troops Carry Out First Maneuvers In City

By JOSEPH B. FLEMING
United Press International
BERLIN (UPI) — U. S. Army troop reinforcements ordered to Berlin by President Kennedy carried out their first maneuvers in the tense city today.

The Army alerted the 1,500 men of the 1st Battle Group, 18th Infantry, at 8 a. m., to see if they were ready to move if conflict breaks out.

The troops rushed to the U. S.
headquarters area and Tempelhof airfield, the main airport base.

A U. S. Army announcement said Brig. Gen. Frederick O. Hartel, troop commander here planned to hold several such tests in the coming weeks.

The battle group which took part in today's test was ordered here by President Kennedy to reinforce the U. S. garrison in Berlin.

It arrived on Aug. 20, just a week after the Communists had closed the border between East and West Berlin to halt the flight of refugees to the West.

An Army announcement said today's test was intended to give the newly arrived unit "an opportunity to become familiar with procedures for the rapid alerting and assembly of its troops."

An Army spokesman said the maneuver tested the Army's communications system, the knowledge of troop commanders and soldiers with their assignments, and the ability to move swiftly.

Meanwhile, the "East German Communist" regime has renewed demands for a separate peace treaty with the Soviet Union, and there were mounting indications that such a pact would be signed before the Communist Party congress meets in Moscow in October.

"Diplomats in West Berlin felt that Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev has accelerated his timetable
for signing a German peace treaty.

Western observers in Moscow believe that the only thing that could interrupt such a timetable would be a Western proposal for East-West talks on the Berlin and German crises.

While the Communists hampered away for a separate treaty, Western frontier guards reported increased Red troop and tank movements along Czechoslovakia's West German border.

To substantiate its contentions,
the UAW last week filed unfair
labor practices charges against GM
on the ground that the firm refused to open its books to prove
it could meet union demands for
out hiking prices. The UAW Monday asked for a speedy hearing in the case.

Said Locals "informed
The Detroit Free Press said GM already had been picked as the target company and indicated tonight's meeting was merely a formality. The paper said GM locals around the country already have received instructions on how to set up picket lines and conduct strike relief programs.

The Free Press said the UAW will ask Ford and Chrysler for day-to-day extensions while a strike is in progress against GM. But if the firms refuse, the 180,000 workers at Ford and Chrysler will continue working without a contract.

The paper added that if there is any sign of progress at GM,
the union will request a contract extension there, too, instead of calling a strike at midnight Thursday.

GM Expected To Be Target Of The UAW

By ROBERT IRVIN
UPI Automotive Editor
DETROIT (UPI) — The United Auto Workers union tonight will pick one of the industry's Big Three as a strike target and indications are it will be General Motors.

The UAW, unhappy because the Big Three have refused to go along with a profit-sharing agreement reached by American Motors, holds an executive board meeting to map strategy for the two days remaining before GM, Ford and Chrysler contracts expire.

Union executive councils at all three firms planned to meet this afternoon and were almost certain to request authority to strike effective midnight Thursday.

Board To Decide

The 24-man board will then pick either GM, Ford or Chrysler as its target. And all signs point to GM.

General Motors with 310,000 workers, has been the main center of emphasis since UAW negotiations started in June. The union believes GM has been "calling the shots" in the current talks and sets the prices for the rest of the industry.

To substantiate its contentions,
the UAW last week filed unfair
labor practices charges against GM
on the ground that the firm refused to open its books to prove
it could meet union demands for
out hiking prices. The UAW Mon-

54 Saved As Boat Rammed By Trawler

By JOHN Mc DONOUGH
United Press International
BLOCK ISLAND, R. I. (UPI) — A fishing party boat with 54 men, women and children aboard sank after a collision with a fishing trawler in thick fog today.

All were saved in a dramatic rescue operation, including 15 who jumped into the rolling sea seconds before the excursion boat went under.

At least eight persons were injured, none seriously.

The Joshua B. loaded with deep-sea fishing enthusiasts and out of Montauk Point, Long Island, N. Y., was rammed by the fishing trawler Anna Grace.

Some passengers were knocked to the decks. There was no panic though an unidentified girl cried hysterically.

The Anna Grace radioed the Coast Guard for help and then tied up to the capsizing Joshua B. The passengers-women and children first were transferred from the sinking vessel to the Anna Grace.

The two boats remained together for about 10 minutes. Then the Joshua B began to list to port. As the boat slowly rolled over, 15 men leaped into the sea and were plucked to safety by the Anna Grace.

In the tradition of the sea, the last man to leave the sinking vessel was its skipper, Capt. Lester Berman of College Point, Long Island. He also was the last person picked out of the water.

Change In Insurance Rates Is Approved

FRANKFORT, Ky. (UPI) — The state Department of Insurance Monday approved insurance higher rates for dwellings and contents valued at $5,000 or less.

State Commissioner of Insurance William T. Hockensmith said the higher rates "might cost property owners possibly half a million dollars a year as a rough estimate."

He said it was not possible accurately to project the cost of the increased rates because the number of policies that will be written at any given premium level was not known.

Hockensmith said the higher rates had been approved in order to increase the availability of this type of insurance to holders of property valued at less than $5,000.

He said that many companies have stopped offering fire insurance on low - priced dwellings since premiums on this protection were not paying a fair share of the insurance companies' losses.

The state Department of Insurance queried some 2,700 fire insurance agents in Kentucky about how rates could be adjusted to provide a solution to the problem of obtaining fire coverage for low priced homes.

The new rate schedule also reduces fire insurance rates for owners of property valued at more than $5,000.

Hockensmith cited as examples the reduction of rates on an $8,000 frame dwelling by 27 per cent in Louisville, 19 per cent in Frankfort and 8 per cent in rural areas.

Secretary Udall Indicates All Obstacles Can Be Overridden

Secretary of the Interior Stewart Udall assured the governors of Kentucky and Tennessee at Kentucky Dam Village State Park last night that he feels a program can be worked out to create a national recreation area in the two states.

Udall said at a dinner at Kentucky Dam Village State Park, "I don't think this should be a snap judgment, but I think I have indicated my general frame of mind. I think there is ground for optimism."

"If the President were to ask me tomorrow, it would be my horseback opinion that you have here an area of national interest and significance."

Earlier during a conference at Paris Landing State Park in Tennessee, the secretary of the interior had emphasized that his visit was a "fact-finding trip" ordered by President Kennedy and that no decision would be made on the project at this time.

Udall said that every agency that has studied the proposed 140,000 acre development, which would be located between Kentucky Lake and Barkley Lake, formed by giant Barkley Dam, has had a favorable report on the project.

At the dinner Udall told Gov. Bert T. Combs and Tennessee Gov. Buford Ellington, "If we are to have a national area we will have to have standards. We don't want any homey-tonk development, but you people have as fine a natural endowment as any part of the country."

"If we can get the kind of cooperation from the people in the orderly development I think we can work out a program in this area."

Smith Broadbent Jr. of Cadiz, chairman of the recently organized Between the Lakes National Recreation Area Association, read a statement to Udall of the aims of the organization formed to promote the development of the area.

Broadbent said the association wants to promote an area with a minimum of disturbance to the livelihoods and homes of residents; and seeks the establishment of a state park on the east shore of the Barkley Lake.

Udall assured Broadbent that he saw nothing in his statement that would be "a stumbling block that we can't get over."

Combs told Broadbent, "I am pretty well committed to do what I can to see that you get a state park on your eastern shore. This would not in any way injure your prospects."

Other speakers at the dinner included National Parks Service Director Conrad L. Wirth, Ellington.

Also attending the meeting at the Dam and at Paris Landing State Park in Tennessee were Lt. Gov. Wilson W. Wyatt, Rep. Frank A. Stubblefield, Kentucky Conservation Commissioner J. L. Matlock and State Parks Director Edward Fox.

Both Ward and Combs said that a state park on the eastern shore of Barkley Lake would benefit from a national recreation area.

They cited the example of Pine Mountain State Park near Pineville which they said is undergoing expansion as a result of an increase in tourist business due to Cumberland Gap National Park near Middlesboro.

Vogel said his agency favors the national recreation area proposal, and is willing to turn over 2,000 acres of its territory for the project.

CHAPTER 22

ROLLISON picked up his car after he had lunched with proletarian relief off two cheese sandwiches at a snack bar, after making sure that he had not been followed.

Along the North Circular Road, he drove at greater speed, then lost some time finding his way to Wembley and the Silver Queen factory. Once in the immediate vicinity, the factory was easy to trace. Several vans were on the road, all small, all glistening like silver, all with superb pictures of the Silver Queen on the outside, and the slogan in flashing letters: IT IS OUR BUSINESS TO MAKE THE WOMAN BEAUTIFUL.

He reached the factory gates and pulled up.

Two lovely girl guards looked at him and the cream-colored car admiringly, and one stepped forward.

"Good afternoon, sir, how can I help you?"

"Do you know if Mr. Paul Vance is on the premises?"

"Just have a message sent through, will you—that I'm a friend of Mrs. James Vance."

"Oh, I see," the girl said. "I think you'd better drive up to the office, sir, and I'll telephone a message. If you ask for Mr. Edge, it will be simpler."

"Who is Mr. Edge?"

"The Secretary, sir. She might have said, 'The Leader' with no greater sense of awe."

"Good," said Rollison, "and thanks." He drove on, along a well-made road, with single storey factory buildings on either side.

The offices, clearly marked, had pictures of the Silver Queen on the windows of the doors, and the slogan on the door-mats. Here, another two girl commissioners were on duty, as sleek and blessed and well-made-up as those at the gate.

One of the girls led the way through a maze of offices, then stopped at a wall of frosted glass, which had a door in it and on the door the name: Jeremiah Edge, Secretary.

The girl tapped, almost reverently, opened the door, and announced him as Mr. Smith. He stepped into a large room, a haven of quiet. But it was a deceptive quiet.

Griselda Vance was here, with a sleek but passable young man.

Griselda Vance was standing by one of the long, narrow windows overlooking a lawn and flower beds. Behind her was an oil painting, beautifully done, and it was so like her that it seemed as if two women were in the room.

She wore a cream-colored linen suit which fitted her like a sheath, and a gossamer-thin scarf was about her neck.

The sleek and passable young man was also standing by his large desk. Only a telephone, a silver inkstand and one file of documents spoiled the shiny smoothness of the desk and a box-like contraption for making internal calls.

"Ah, Mr. Smith," said Edge. He looked very hard at Rollison, and then added: "But surely—Mr. Rollison."

"Either will do," Rollison said. "Edge smiled. It was a quick, automatic kind of smile that went with sleek brown hair and bright brown eyes and general smoothness: yet he was not a man to dislike on sight. "I don't think we've met before, although of course I know of you very well. I hope you haven't called on us in the way of business?"

He shook hands, briskly.

He turned towards Griselda, and went on in the same easy, flowing voice: "Allow me to present Mrs. Vance—Griselda, Mr. Richard Rollison."

"We have met," said Griselda Vance.

"Oh, for a split second Edge seemed almost nonplussed, but he quickly recovered. "Well, Mr. Rollison, how can I help you?"

"I'd rather see Mr. Paul Vance."

"Ah, yes," said Edge, and gave a little frown: a kind of synthetic expression of apology.

"I'm afraid it can't be arranged. Mr. Paul has given strict instructions that he is not to be disturbed. You understand that he is greatly distressed by his son's death, and I would feel it an unwarrantable intrusion to interrupt his privacy."

"What would convince him that I must see him?" asked Rollison, and smiled amiably.

"Evidence of more disaster?"

He took Agatha's box of Peach Bloom from his pocket, and the shape must have been familiar to Edge, even though the box was wrapped up. He took it to the desk and opened it, with great care. Griselda came nearer, while Edge stared intently. Rollison took the top of the box off, and a little powder spilled on to the desk.

"Sorry," he said, and put the tip of his forefinger in it. "This is your make, isn't it?"

Edge said, almost sharply: "Yes, of course."

"Could you be sure it isn't an imitation?"

"I think you might hope that it is," said Rollison, and with his brightest smile, he held out his hand, with the powder on the finger tip. "I let me rub a little on the back of your hand, will you?"

Edge exclaimed: "Why on earth—" and stopped. Slowly he extended his left hand: no one could have behaved with greater reluctance.

Griselda moved forward, her hands coming within Rollison's line of vision. He rubbed a little powder on to the back of Edge's hand, and then turned to the woman. "Would you like to experiment, too?"

Her eyes were enormous with inquiry.

"Yes." Rollison dabbed his finger in the powder again, and did exactly as he had to Edge.

"Guaranteed to do no lasting harm. Just rub a little on a tender spot, wait ten minutes, and watch 'em scratch."

Seconds ticked away. At last Edge said very softly: "Feel it, Griselda?"

"Yes," she said, "it's beginning to—itch."

"It will last about ten minutes," said Rollison. He took a sheet of paper from his pocket and handed it to Edge. "There's the analyst's report. Talc base, color pigments, synthetic perfume, natural perfume and powdered glass wool. Rubbed on the face it would cause quite a sensation, wouldn't it?"

Edge had gone pale.

"It couldn't have happened here! It must have been introduced into the box after it was bought from the shop."

"There's the box," said Rollison, "opened just as you see, with the cellophane cover broken. Agatha was in a hurry."

He smiled.

Griselda exclaimed: "Agatha?"

"Agatha Bell!" breathed Edge.

A surprise awaits Reginald Jameson, the manager of the cosmetic factory, it appears. Continue the story here tomorrow.

Death Rate From Influenza And Pneumonia On Downgrade

NEW YORK, N.Y. — The death rate from influenza and pneumonia in the last four years has been adversely affected by widespread outbreaks of influenza, although mortality from these diseases seems currently on the downswing, statisticians report.

The first outbreak of Asian influenza swept the country in the last quarter of 1957, with a second but less severe wave in the early months of 1958. As a consequence, the combined death rate from influenza and pneumonia in 1957 rose to 36 per 100,000 population — highest in a decade, the statisticians said. The rate fell slightly in 1958 and again in 1959, but in 1960 the rate exceeded even the 1957 record because of another major outbreak of influenza in the first quarter of the year.

Provisional data for the first quarter of 1961 show a reversal of the trend once more. The influenza and pneumonia death rate for the first three months of 1961 was 28.3 per 100,000 compared with 65.5 for the same period last year, a decrease of two-fifths.

During 1957-58, the latest years for which detailed information is available, each age group recorded a rise in mortality from pneumonia and influenza compared with 1954-55 when the rates were at an all time low. Of special significance was a 50 per cent increase among white men in the age range 55-74 years. Despite the differences in the levels in the two periods, males had a higher death rate than females at almost every age. Among white women, by far the largest relative rise in the death rate occurred at ages 15-34, years, which include the main childbearing period.

The recent influenza outbreaks also appear to have unfavorably influenced the death rate from some other diseases, especially cardiovascular — renal conditions, the statisticians said. It was estimated, in fact, that the excess number of deaths from these conditions, alone, was greater than those from pneumonia and influenza.

During 1957-60, the actual mortality from all causes in the United States exceeded by approximately 86,000 the number expected. About half this total was accounted for by the cardiovascular-renal diseases, and one-third by influenza and pneumonia. More than two-thirds of the excess deaths were among people at ages 65 and over.

There is no specific treatment for influenza, although respiratory complications, particularly bacterial pneumonia, often can be controlled by antibiotics. However, the effectiveness of influenza vaccines in the prevention of the disease has been demonstrated in a number of studies. One such investigation made among Navy recruits during the influenza epidemic of 1957 yielded favorable results attributable in large measure to the immunization program, the statisticians concluded.

The tape comes in 25 decorator shades so there's something to mix or match with every color scheme.

Use it to make a gay design for cafe curtains, to brighten a plain tablecloth with fancy trimming, to edge sheets or pillowcases with interest, to make a vivid design on solid-color slipcovers, bedspreads or cushion covers.

The tape can also create iron-on appliques for cotton dresses or aprons or for children's clothes.

If you'd like instructions for creating the iron-on designs used in the dining room setting pictured here, send your request and a large self-addressed stamped envelope to me in care of this newspaper.

LATE WIRE NEWS

By United Press International.
LOUISVILLE Ky. (UP) — Mayor Bruce Hoblitzell said Monday the City of Louisville apparently will have to pay the deficit from the historical pageant, "Bound For Kentucky," which closed last week after a six weeks' run. Ticket sales from the drama about the founding of Louisville brought in $44,253, but fell $4,015 short of covering operating costs. Production expenses also will add to the deficit.

WASHINGTON (UP) — Rep. Frank Burke, D-Ky., Monday announced a $47,616 federal grant to the City of Louisville by the Urban Renewal Administration of the Housing and Home Finance Agency. The "advance-planning grant" will be used to help the University of Louisville prepare to expand its campus.

WASHINGTON (UP) — The United States Department of Commerce reported Monday that the number of Kentucky households rose 72,198 in the decade from 1950 to 1960. The department now lists 851,867 Kentucky households, a 9.3 per cent increase for the 10-year period.

at tackle, Russell Moss at center, and Jimmy Rose, all W.K.C. back. Rose was also the leading scorer. As yet their positions have not been adequately filled, the head coach stated.

Minor injuries to Williams, 200 pound key-blocker, and to Robertson, a 156 pound jet who gained 1449 yards on the ground last year, have kept the backfield below par.

Perhaps the brightest feature in Murray's potential picture is its depth in reserve strength with at least two boys of near equal ability for every position.

Assisting Coach Ty Tolland and end coach Eli Alexander and line coach Dub Russell.

Trigg County expects to have a better team than last year and would like nothing better than to knock the props from under the conference contender in the opening round.

Game time has been set for 8 o'clock and a capacity crowd is expected to turn out at Holland Stadium for the opener.
